General Market Commentary

In the final quarter of 2023, also described as the "everything rally", most major asset classes experienced positive returns as markets factored in anticipated future interest rate cuts. Bond markets were positive across the board as markets began celebrating the prospect of declining rates, supported by muted inflation and the absence of a recession. Developed markets outperformed emerging markets, primarily due to China's continued negative impact on the broader emerging market performance.

In the US, stocks posted strong gains in the final quarter of the year as expectations of interest rate cuts came to the forefront. U.S. stocks concluded the quarter with a remarkable ninth consecutive rally, with notable contributions from sectors sensitive to interest rates, such as information technology, consumer discretionary, and real estate. While the dominant performers throughout the year were the "magnificent seven," the final quarter witnessed a more widespread rally. Data indicated a slowdown in U.S. Consumer Price Index (CPI) from 3.7% in September to 3.2% in October and further to 3.1% in November.

UK equities delivered positive returns during the quarter as hopes of imminent rate cuts began being priced into domestically focused stocks. The inflation rate declined in October to 4.6%, down from the previous month's 6.7%, marking its lowest level in two years. November saw an additional drop in inflation, surpassing expectations and reaching 3.9%. The Bank of England maintained its interest rates at 5.25% for the third consecutive time in December, the highest level since the financial crisis. During the quarter, UK government bond yields decreased from 4.44% to 3.54%.
